Bristol Woman Wakes To Find an Intruder's Fingers on Her Throat

Alone in House With Babies When Attempted Assault is Made

FLEES AT HER SCREAMS

Early Morning Marauder Believed to Have Been on Robbery Bent

An attempted criminal assault was made upon Mrs. George Neuman, 334 Hayes street, Harriman, early this morning, but the assailant was frightened away before accomplishing his purpose. The woman was alone in the house except for two small children.

The man who is believed to have been bent on robbery entered Mrs. Neuman's bedroom about 2 a. m. grabbed her by the throat and forced his fingers into her mouth, to prevent any outcry.

Mrs. Neuman was however able to scream and this awakened a little boy who was sleeping in the room with his mother. The youngster cried out in fear and this awakened a neighbor, who also screamed. The police ran to the house but the intruder had gone.

Mrs. Neuman at present resides alone with her two children, her husband being in a distant city, where he is employed.

Mrs. Neuman, with her two children retired last night at their usual time. The other child was in a room adjoining that of its mother.

About two o'clock this morning a man suddenly walked into the room of the mother as she lay beside her youngster. Mrs. Neuman did not awaken until the man grabbed her by the throat and put his fingers into her mouth. She gave a scream as she saw the form of the man above her bed.

Her son, startled out of his sleep took up the cry and a Mrs. Johnson, who lives adjoining, screamed. When the Harriman police arrived in answer to the calls, the man had made good his escape.

Chief Aungst, of Harriman police, at once notified the railroad police and the Bristol department. All of that section in the vicinity of Harriman was thoroughly combed, but no trace of the intruder could be found.

Mrs. Neuman is able to give only a meager descripton of the man, who she says was of medium stature. She did not know him, she says, and never saw him before to the best of her recollection.

Two More Toll Bridges To Go

PLACE AN ESTIMATE

Two additional bridges spanning the Delaware River will be acquired and freed of toll shortly. The Pennsylvania-New Jersey Commission to Eliminate Toll Bridges has so decided.

The next bridges to be freed by the commission are that between Wilburtha and Yardley, about three miles above Trenton and the bridge at Milford, Pa. In order to acquire the first of these structures it will be necessary to institute condemnation proceedings, and a resolution asking the attorneys general of the two states to take steps toward this end was adopted by the joint commission at this meeting. The commission has entered into an agreement with the owners of the Milford bridge for the purchase of this structure for $31,500.

Owners of the Yardley bridge have fixed a price of $97,000, but the commission is not willing to go higher than $55,000. The bridge is understood to have been bought for $15,000 following the freshet of about twenty years ago, when practically all of the vehicular traffic bridges south of Port Jervis were swept away. Since then, it is said about $40,000 has been expended on its improvement.

The contract for the reconstruction of the free bridge between the southern part of Trenton and Morrisville was awarded by the commission to C. Carl Poinsette, of Trenton whose bid was $56,750. For the convenience of hundreds of employes of the Pennsylvania railroad yards in Morrisville and many Morrisville residents who are employes in Trenton, a foot bridge of a temporary character will be constructed. Vehicular traffic, however, will be diverted to the Calhoun street toll bridge, in the western section, while repairs are in progress.

File Appeal On Tax Collection From Estates

WASHINGTON, Sept. 21—An appeal from a decision of the United States circuit court of appeals at Chicago to determine whether the income tax can be levied and collected by the government on the income from an estate in the hands of a trustee in the same manner as levied and collected upon the income of individuals, was filed in the United States supreme court today by Solicitor General Beck.

The government contends the income taxes can be levied and collected from an estate in the same manner as from an individual but the Chicago court held that an estate in the hands of trustees was not a "person" within the meaning of the income tax law of 1913.

Borah Denounces The German-American Treaty

BY J. BART CAMPBELL
Staff Correspondent I. N. S.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 21—Denouncing the German-American treaty as a "most insurmountable obstacle to disarmament," Senator William E. Borah, Republican, of Idaho, member of the senate foreign relations committee, announced today that he would both oppose and vote against its ratification by the senate.

In a statement given exclusively to the International News Service, Senator Borah left no doubt as to his purpose to fight ratification of the German-American treaty with all the determination and vigor he displayed in combating ratification of the Versailles pact.

Borah's emphatic condemnation of the German American treaty fell like a bombshell among republican leaders of the senate when it reconvened at noon with the reopening of congress.

James Pegg and Thomas Martz were sent to the Reformatory by Judge Smith, of Bloomsburg, after they admitted entering the home of Charles Mausteller and stealing $17 while the family were at church.

County Returns Show Primary To Have Been Tame

But Scant Percentage of Total Vote Went to Polls

RESULTS IN TOWNSHIP

Fleckenstine and Walmsley Nominated Tax Collector and Justice

Primary election throughout Bucks County was a tame affair yesterday, due to the fact that no contests were staged for nomination of candidates on either party county ticket.

The vote polled was light and but a scant percentage of the total vote went to the polls. Up until 11.15 o'clock this morning but 29 of the 96 election districts in Bucks County had reported.

The Republican and Democratic county tickets were nominated.

The returns have not been tabulated and, for that reason, but few figures were available this afternoon.

Hiram Keller received the Republican nomination for re-election as district attorney. He is to be opposed by Charles H. Ortt, Democrat. Robert H. Engart, Republican candidate for prothonotary, will be opposed by Carroll B. Price, Democrat. For director of the poor, Reuben G. Detweiler is the Republican candidate and Belle Vansant is the Democratic nominee. Jury commissioner candidates will be James A. Nolan, Republican, and James H. Fitzgerald, Democrat.

A very light vote was polled in Doylestown, where the only feature of interest was the Republican councilmanic contest in the first ward. Former county treasurer Wilmer W. Cornell and George H. Miller, trust officer of the Bucks County Trust Company, were nominated. Charles McIntyre, the other contestant, was about 18 votes behind Miller.

In Bristol township Dr. Horace Fleckenstine was nominated for tax collector by a majority of 217. His opponent was William K. Stackhouse of east Bristol township. Mr. Stackhouse polled a total of 187 votes and Fleckenstine polled 404.

There was a contest for Justice of Peace in Bristol township between Mr. Walmsley, of Harriman and William K. Stackhouse, of east Bristol township. Walmsley won the nomination by the narrow margin of 34 votes.

The vote was as follows:

Walmsley—East Bristol, 30; West Bristol, 234; Harriman, 60.

Bristol Votes Against The Revision Convention

Borough Joined Township, County and State And Voiced Disapproval By a Negative Majority of 249.

Bristol added its voice to what seems to have been state-wide acclamation of "No!" in answer to the constitutional convention question put to the voters on the primary ballot yesterday.

The proposed convention was defeated by a majority in Bristol Borough of 249. 257 borough electors voted "Yes" on the question and 506 voted "No" on the question; "Shall a constitutional convention be held in the year 1922, as provided in the act of assembly approved April 27th, 1921?"

The women electors did not give the constitutional revision proposition the support that its proponents had predicted of them. This was a noticeable fact in both in Bristol borough and throughout the township and county.

The vote in Bristol on the Constitutional Convention was as follows:

First ward—Yes, 79; No, 143.

Second ward—Yes, 60; No, 106.

Third ward—Yes, 19; No, 78.

Fourth ward—Yes, 50; No, 49.

Fifth ward—Yes, 49; No, 130.

Had the voters approved the convention, however, Howard I. James, of Bristol and Miss Emeline Henry Hooven, of Norristown, who had the endorsement of the Bucks and Montgomery Counties Republican organizations, would have gone to the convention as delegates. The borough solicitor polled a vote for delegate which is plainly a compliment from his fellow townsmen as to his fitness to represent them in the convention, had it been held.

Joseph R. Grundy, Republican State Committeeman of Bucks County, said this morning that the constitutional convention proposition had been defeated in Bucks County.

Republican State Committeeman Charles Johnson, of Montgomery County, said in Norristown this morning that the constitution proposition was defeated in his county.

The Eighth Congressional District therefore negatives a pet project of Governor Sproul. The Governor's own county, Delaware is understood to have rejected the convention by 12,000 majority.

In Bristol township the sub-rural element voted strongly against the convention. In Harriman, however, the proposition got a majority.

The vote throughout the county was in majority against it, but Doylestown is reported to have approved it by a majority of 101 in the three wards.

Bucks County defeated the Constitutional revision proposition by about three-to-two vote as far as the returns received indicate. In the 29 districts to report, the returns show that Howard I. James, of Brisol, and Emeline Henry Hooven, of Norristown, carried the county by big votes. Ashton Locke Worrall polled a light vote.

Eight hundred and seventy-two voted "Yes" on the Constitutional Convention and 1125 voted "No" in the 29 districts to report up until noon today.

Philadelphia recorded a big majority against the proposition.

The defeat of the proposition to hold a convention to revise the State Constitution, while strongly advocated by Governor Sproul and all of the State administration leaders, is forecast by reports received from different sections of the State. The opposition of the State Grange was manifested in all of the agricultural districts and in the coal fields, both anthracite and bituminous, the miners voted against the project.

The activity of the various patriotic societies against the convention was carried to the polling places, many of which were manned by members of such organizations.

Leaders in both the Penrose and Vare camps put out sample ballots marked "No" on this issue.

Senator Penrose long ago proclaimed his opposition to the calling of such a convention, but his desire not to have a clash with the State administration made him refrain not only from opposing the bill in the Legislature, but also from making any public statement to influence the popular referendum on the subject.

MORRISVILLE, Sept. 21—The interest which was manifested in the proposed plan to provide the borough with a water purification plant resulted in its approval. The voters sanctioned a bond issue of $72,500 for the purpose.

There were 289 votes in favor of the proposition while 86 voted against the loan. There were many ballots which were not voted.

Arthur Blinn won the nomination for tax collector on both the Republican and Democratic tickets. He was opposed by Joshua Tomlinson, who opposed by Joshua Tomlinson who put up a vigorous campaign. Mr. Blinn's total vote on the Republian ticket was 183, while Mr. Tomlinson polled 134 votes. In the First Ward Blinn's vote was 52 and Tomlinson's 33, while in the Second Ward Blinn polled 83 against 33 for Tomlinson. In the Third Ward Blinn's vote was 46 and that of Tomlinson was 64. An Explosion Kills 1200 In Germany

Report Says That It is the Worst in Years to Occur

EARTHQUAKE FORCE

BERLIN, Sept. 21—Twelve hundred persons are reported to have been killed in a terrific explosion in the Baden Aniline works at Ludwigshafen today.

It was the worst explosion of the kind that ever took place in Germany. The scene of the blast and adjacent territory was described as a veritable battlefield, covered with wreckage and mangled bodies.

The first report received by the Deutsch Allgemeine Zeitung estimated the casualties at 700, but subsequent dispatches magnified the extent of the disaster and the appalling loss of life.

(Ludwigshafen is in the Bavarian palatinate on the Rhine and is the seat of immense dye works).

The explosion had the force of an earthquake, destroying houses, tearing down telephone and telegraph wires and smashing everything in its path. The blast played many freakish tricks. In some places houses were left standing in the midst of destruction with only windows broken and tables overturned.

Prof. Butts Getting Lads in Shape; Harriman Grounds Are Secured

GIRLS PLAN B. B. TEAM

The Bristol High School football team is developing rapidly under the training of Professor Franklin L. Butts. About thirty students are under training and from the best players, the varsity eleven will be selected.

Professor Butts has made a ruling, that all students engaged in athletics must attain a continuous average of eighty in their studies, or be dropped from the teams.

President Doron Green of the local school board has completed arrangements whereby the high school gridiron team may use the enclosed base ball field at the upper end of Harriman during the months of October and November.

Several out of town games have already been arranged, included in which is a game with the Wilmington High School. Professor Butts is trying to arrange a number of games on the home grounds, on Saturday afternoons, when the public will have an opportunity to attend.

Efforts are being made, to find a suitable place where basket ball can be played this winter.

Miss Taylor, the teacher of Domestic Science is assisting principal Butts in the training of the grls. A volley ball court has been laid out in the school yard, back of the high school building and a girls' basket ball team will be organized.

"NOW IS THE TIME FOR ALL GOOD MEN AND WOMEN—"

The enrolled voters in the various political parties having yesterday selected the candidates who will comprise their party tickets at the forthcoming election, it is the duty of each party member to turn to and work for the success of his or her party at the polls in November.

The Republican party members in Bristol have stated their preferences for candidates on the Republican ballot and the majority sentiment in the party prevails. The winners of the nominations will therefore receive the fullest and most loyal support of all sincere Republicans.

The Fall campaign is now before the party and, though the prospects are not for a very closely contested election at the November polls, yet every Republican voter should show his or her party loyalty by working to the fullest extent for the party ticket, in unison and in accord.

The Republican women electors made a most creditable showing in Bristol borough and township. In the borough they, perhaps, displayed more interest in the primary election, (the first in which they have had the franchise) but, nevertheless, the women voters throughout the township evinced a marked desire to participate in naming their party's standard bearers.

The women voters in the borough were very manifest at the polls and throughout the wards. They displayed intelligent comprehension of the issues, voted accordingly and aided their less informed sisters in voting intelligently.

Contrary to expectations, the proposed constitutional revision proposition did not seem to find much favor among the women voters. It had been predicted that the women voters, having a feminine liking for a change, would vote largely for the proposed revision. They did not, however.

The primary is over and the returns, as tabulated, show a healthy interest of the voters, though the balloting was, taking it all in all, rather light.

The Republican party ticket having been selected, it is fitting to close this editorial by paraphrasing the familiar phrase; "Now is the time for all good men and women to work for the party."

BARS THE RABBIT PUNCH

The rabbit punch is not a soft drink. It is punch with a kick to it. Why a punch with a kick to it is called a rabbit punch is another question. The rabbit has considerable speed, and hind legs that hit and clamp the earth in a leaping run, but if this is the punch, it is better adapted to speed than to the knockout. Repeated over and over again on the same object, there would, of course, be some kick to the rabbit punch.

It is the rabbit punch which Jack Dempsey applied to George Carpentier, the French pugilist, whose friends expected him to win the world's championship with one blow on the top of Dempsey's dome, or whatever it is that Dempsey wears on the pinnacle of his neck. The measured repetition of the pummeling on Carpentier's head and body was the rabbit punch which prepared the French pugilist for treatment by his seconds.

The State Boxing Commission of Connecticut has adopted rules which prohibit the rabbit punch. The restriction does not mean much, except for Connecticut. If the knockout blow is barred, citizens of Connecticut will go to New Jersey to see prize fights. Human nature which takes to bruising is like the human nature which patronized the gladiatorial battles in ancient Rome; it wants to see the victim brutally beaten and pounded down to the floor, limp and helpless.

FRENCH DEVIL IS ADMITTED

Germany sometimes perpetrates a practical joke. It is also a patron of music. Whether it is having a laugh at the expense of its recent foe, France, or is abandoning hate in its love for art, is not, as yet certain. The simple fact is that Germany has granted permission for George Baklanoff, baritone of the Chicago Opera Company, to sing "Mephisto" in the French language in the Berlin rendition of Faust.

The French language has been under the ban in Berlin for seven years. The rule is broken for the first time to let the devil sing in French. All the other vocalists will use the German tongue.

Whether it is a joke or the artistic bent which re-acquaints Berlin with the French language, the benefit will be wholly Berlin's. Baklanoff is well known, and he is international. Berlin will understand him as well in French as in German. And so it happens that France, too, may have some fun over the French devil in the German opera.

UNEARTHING RELICS

Large earthworks, constructed by the Mound Builders in the prehistoric past, rise conspicuously in the Illinois lowlands, about ten miles from St. Louis. In several groups there are about 150 mounds, the largest, known as Cahokia Mound, being 1080 feet long, 702 feet wide, and 102 feet high, containing 1,070,000 cublic yards of earth. The background to these structures built by an unknown race in the unknown long ago is a high and sweeping limestone ridge.

Scientists are now opening the smaller mounds in an endeavor to learn of the people who formed them. Of all the prehistoric remants in North America, the mounds of these groups are the largest, and, it is believed, the oldest. As the earthworks seem to have been undisturbed by the Indians, French, Spaniards and Americans, the scientists hope to dip up skeltons, utensils and relics which will identify the race which habited parts of America before the Redskins.

The exploration and excavation of one of the smallest mounds has uncovered what may have been a burial place. Several skeletons have been found in it, red pottery of the Mound Builders' period, red ochre, and Indian arrow heads. Dr. Warren K. Moorhead, of Phillips Andover Academy, Andover, Mass., who is in charge of the research, expects to dip up a complete skelton.

The next largest mounds, at Honeywell, Ohio, were excavated about thirty years ago. Relics taken from the Cahokia group, at the city limits of East St. Louis, Ill., indicate that the Ohio residents traded with those of Illinois.

Much interest attaches to the present investigation, as there is a prospect that things of great historic significance will be unearthed. It is proposed to preserve the largest mounds in a State or National park.

No work is more alluring than that of trying to unravel the mysteries of the beginnings of the many branches of the human family. Something of significance is found in every investigation. But one thing that is never found is that unsubstantial, mythical oddity which is called the "missing link." common sense.

Scientists of the world have been meeting in New York. Scientists pride themselves on their exactitude, yet what is most interesting is their speculativeness.

"HE LOVES US— HE LOVES US NOT"— BY MORRIS

COMMENT ON TIMELY TOPICS

AMERICANS AT THE CONFERENCE

The announcement that President Harding has selected as American representatives to the limitation of armament conference in Washington in November Secretary of State Hughes Elihu Root and Senators Lodge and Underwood, should delight every sturdy American. Mr. Hughes since March 4 has leaped to international fame. While asserting American rights respect for them would logically require equal treatment of all other countries. With his trained intellect, he seized on the vital fact that all that Germany conceded was the result of being defeated in the war, as the terms of the armistice made clear, and that there was no diplomatic triumph in the Versailles Treaty. Nations seeking to parcel out rights conceded to all countries were acting without authority.

Every move he has made has been a masterly one. All the straw men that superficial folk raised have been brushed aside. All the lions in the path have disappeared. As a mist dispeller Mr. Hughes is easily first among world statesmen. With incomparable vision, with honest purpose and with leonine courage he has been establishing sanity in a war-maddened world.

Elihu Root is chief of our elder statesmen. Winner of the Nobel peace prize, he has devoted more attention to the manner of promoting peace than any other statesman in the world Age has not taken the edge from his intellect, cooled his heart or divested him of his sturdy Americanism. He has suffered in public opinion from distortions of his remarks and from misunderstanding of his farsighted policies, but there is no device of diplomacy he cannot see through and there is no bug that can get under any chip unobserved by his vigilant eyes.

Senator Lodge needs no introduction to the world. He has been in House or Senate for 34 years, and before that served two terms in the Massachusetts Legislature. He was graduated from Harvard College 50 years ago, later took his law degree and his degree of doctor of philosophy. He chose literature as his profession and, beginning with his thesis on "The Land-Law of the Anglo-Saxons" in 1876, he has written the most imposing shelf of books to the credit of any man in public life. His research has covered the entire field of American history. He has the LL D. degree from nine of the leading universities of America. He is also a master of languages and for 20 years he spent his summer vacations in the capitals of Europe, meeting the greatest figures and studying conditions at first hand. He has always been a sturdy American. His pride has made him independent of political consideraton in foreign affairs. He was first to defend President Cleveland's Venezuelan note, he often differed with his bosom friend Theodore Roosevelt on foreign affairs, and opposed many features of John Hay's treaties he felt dangerous to this country. His fight on the League of Nations is known of all men and, but for his residence in Alabama might have long ago been the Democratic choice for President. While he voted with the Wilson Administration on the League of Nations, he clearly showed that he did not share the enthusiasm or the stubbornness of Senator Hitchcock, the minority leader. He recognizes the decision of that question at the polls and is too much of an American to try to injure the Harding program for partisan reasons.

Senator Uuderwood is a native Kentuckian, but he was educated in Alabama, and began his practice of law there. He lacks eight years of equalling Senator Lodge's continuous Congressional service and he has been in the Senate only six years and a few months. He took to the Senate all the prestige he had won in the House, a rare achievement. He is recognized as one of the ablest men in his party

The country is to be congratulated on every member of the delegation. Mr. Harding has acted with characteristic judgment. All these representatives will be found working honestly and effectually for promotion of peace and economy in a practical way. ST. LOUIS TIMES.

THEATRES

Forrest Theatre

When the screen discloses Elaine Hammerstein in the first scene of her new Selznick Picture, "The Miracle of Manhattan" at the Forrest theatre tonight the surroundings and atmosphere convey the impression that one is about to witness a conventional society drama. But it may be stated that there is nothing conventional about this picture and it is a drama of all sorts of society, both high and low.

The story by Bradley King, rapidly develops into a fast moving tale of romance and adventure and the leading character is transported in a breath taking manner from her luxurious surroundings into an atmosphere of the direst poverty.

The diversity of scenes and characters are worthy of the best examples of O. Henry and the idea of a woman of wealth changing places with a destitute waif inorder to experience a thrill is both unique and original.

The thrills are there in abundance and the spectacle of Elaine Hammerstein surrounded by a collection of gangsters and other tough characters is novel to say the least.

The star is called upon to portray every emotion that a human being is subject to and her work calls forth the highest admiration for her ability in this most difficult role.

New Colonial Theatre

Photoplay lovers who like realism and idealism interestingly interwoven—who like thrills and smiles, humor and pathos captivatingly combined are advised to attend the New Colonial Theatre tonight and see "The Good Bad Wife", adapted from the Mary Imlay Taylor story "The Wild Fawn", recently appearing in Munsey's Magazine.

The title role is an original characterization and is said to be convincingly and charmingly portrayed by Dorothy Green who contributed a series of successful roles to the screen The product of the Parisian music halls, and a wild, unconventional, beautiful, physical creature, "The Good-Bad Wife" marries the scion of an aristocratic Southern family, and puts him and his very respectable parents through six reels of alternate alarm, indignation, vexation, aggravation, fright and worry, before she proves to them in the sixth reel that she is a regular genuine true-blue woman, ready to sacrifice her happiness for her husband's, ready and willing to accept a life of loneliness and sadness so that he may be free from her and the constant plights in which she places him—but then, that would spoil one of the finest climaxes that ever appeared in a photoplay.

Sisters
by KATHLEEN NORRIS

...ried it: You mean tried marriage! But one doesn't try marriage! It's a fact. It's like the color of your eyes."

"Alix," the little sister pleaded eagerly, "you don't know what it is—you don't know what it is! Always meeting people I don't like; always living in places I hate; always feeling that my own self is being smothered and lost and shrunk; always listening to Mart complaining and criticizing people—"

Peter interrupted seriously:

"Oh, far too young!" she agreed quickly. "The thing I—I can't think of," she said, "is how young I was—only a little girl. I knew nothing; I wasn't ready to be anybody's wife!"

Something in the poignant sorrow of her tone went straight to their hearts, and for the first time Peter had an idea of the real suffering she had borne.

"If I had a child, even, or if Martin needed me," Cherry said, "then it might be different! But I'm only a burden to him—"

"His letter doesn't sound as if he thought of you as a burden," Alix suggested mildly.

"Ah, well, the minute I leave him he has a different tone," Cherry explained, and Peter said, with a glance almost of surprise at his wife:

"It's an awfully difficult position for a woman of any pride, dear!"

Alix, kneeling to adjust the fire, as she was constantly tempted to do, met his look and laid a soot-streaked hand on his knee.

"Pete, dearest, of course it is! But—" and Alix looked doubtfully from one to the other— "but divorce is a hateful thing!" she added, shaking her head. "It—It never seems to me justifiable!"

"Divorce is an institution," Peter said. "You may not like it any more than you like prisons or madhouses; it has its uses."

"People get divorces every day!" Cherry added. "Isn't divorce better than living along in marriage—without love?"

"Oh, love!" Alix said scornfully. "Love is just another name for passion and selfishness and laziness, half the time!"

"You can say that, because yours is one of the happy marriages," Cherry said. "It might be very different—if Peter weren't Peter!"

As she said his name she sent him her trusting smile; her blue eyes shone with affection, and the exquisite curve of her mouth deepened. Peter smiled back, and looked away in a little confusion.

"I can't imagine the circumstances under which I shouldn't love you and Peter!" Alix summarized it, triumphantly.

"And Martin?" Peter asked.

"Ah, well; I didn't marry Martin!" his wife reminded him quickly. "I didn't promise to love and honor Martin in sickness and health; for richer, for poorer; for better, for worse—by George!" Alix interrupted herself, in her boyish way, "those are terrific words, you know. And a promise is a promise!"

"And even for infidelity you don't believe people ought to seperate?" Cherry asked.

"Nonsense!" Peter said.

"But you said—that Martin never—"

"No, I'm not speaking of Martin now!"

"Well, wouldn't that come under 'worse'?" Alix asked.

"Tut, my child," Peter expostulated kindly. "My dear benighted wife—here is such a thing as a soul—a mind—a personality! To be tied to a—well, to a coarsening influence day after day is living death! It is worse than any bodily discomfort—"

"I don't see it!" Alix persisted. "I think there's a lot of nonsense talked about the fammy oncompreezy—but it seems to me that if you have a home and meals and books and friends and the country to walk in, you—"

"Oh, heavens, Alix; you don't know what you're talking about!" Cherry interrupted her impatiently. "Sometimes I think your marriage is as—as queer as my own."

* * * * * * * *

Nothing more was said for several days upon the subject of a possible divorce. One afternoon Peter crossed the porch, tired and hot, and found everything apparently deserted. He dropped into a chair, and was still breathless from the rapid climb uphill, when stray notes from the piano reached his ears; a chord, a carefully played bit of bass; then a chord again. Then slowly, but with dainty accuracy and even feeling, Cherry began to play a strange little study of Schumann. Peter knew it was Cherry, because Alix's touch was always firm and sure; more than that, he himself had played this same bit no longer ago than last night, and he remembered now that Cherry had asked him just what it was.

He experienced a sudden and pleasing emotion; he did not stop to analyze it. But he had been ruffled in spirit a moment before; Alix had known he was to come on this train and had not met him with the car; and while he really did not mind the walk up, he disliked the feeling that they had entirely forgotten him.

Presently there was silence: then Cherry tried another little study and finished it, and the hot summer stillness reigned again.

With a sense that he had been dozing, if only for a few minutes, Peter opened his eyes. Framed in the cabin doorway, poised like a butterfly against the dark background of the room, stood Cherry. He knew that she had been standing so for some time, for a full minute; perhaps more.

They looked at each other in a silence that grew more and more awkward by great plunges. Peter had time to wish that he had kept his eyes shut; to wish that he had smiled when he first saw her—he could not have forced himself to smile now—to wonder how they were ever to speak—where they were rushing—rushing—rushing—before she turned noiselessly and vanished into the dim room.

Peter lay there, and his heart pounded. A moment ago he had been a tired man, fretted because his wife forgot to meet him; now there was something new in the world. And rapidly all the world became only a background, only a setting, for this extraordinary sensation. The hills beyond still swam in the hot sunlight, the mountain rose into the blue, but the light that changes all life lay over ...

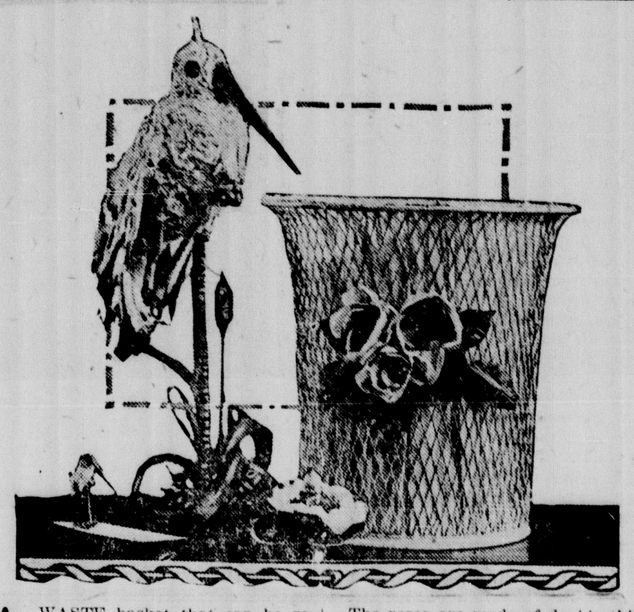
FOR THE STORK LUNCHEON AND THE GUEST CHAMBER



A WASTE basket that can be refreshed with a new lining and decorated with a new cluster of flowers every once in a while will commend itself to every home-maker. Also it accommodates itself to color schemes when the time comes for redecorating walls and supplying new furnishings, and it makes a pretty and inexpensive gift. Such a basket is pictured here. The basket part is one of those simple wicker affairs that are strong and light. They may be used in their own light tan color or painted, or enameled to harmonize with the room they are to serve in.

The basket pictured, meant for a sleeping room, is enameled in white. Its lining is a medium light blue crepe paper which looks like silk, shirred in at the top and bottom. But is far less expensive and much easier to insert. The paper is basted along the top and bottom of the basket "fulled" in so that it appears to be shirred. The bottom is also covered. For a finish strips of the paper about an inch wide are twisted at intervals of less than an inch, making what looks like narrow ribbon shirred into scallops. This is also basted down.

The roses are made of double thicknesses of the crepe paper, pasted together and cut into petals. Two tones are used for each rose and roses in any color or colors are made. The foliage is bought ready-made or one may utilize millinery foliage.

Occasionally, the stork having announced his coming, is welcomed by a stork luncheon or "baby shower," whereto friends come bearing gifts. For the luncheon table, decorations are pictured. First is the stork for the center. A cardboard silhouette of his body is cut out, padded with cotton and covered with crepe paper crumpled to simulate feathers. His legs, feet and bill are made of wire covered with paper and he stands in a square of cardboard which supports also the paper cat-tail and its leaves. Place cards are little storks, made of peanuts and paper, and paper water lilies, each holding a tiny kewpie among its paper stamens, provide favors for the guests.

When you see the linemen replacing the telephone poles, it may not mean that they are decayed, but that the automobile speeders are unable to keep in the road.

Snake-Charmer's Secret.

How does the snake-charmer charm? asks a writer in the Popular Science Monthly. That's one of the questions we've always asked ourselves. And now an English doctor tells us one of the secrets.

Take the case of the cobra, for instance. It is a very venomous snake, yet the snake-charmer is not harmed when bitten by one.

The secret lies in the fact that the charmer "milks" the cobra before he allows himself to be bitten. He makes the cobra bite into a piece of meat, thereby expelling two thirds of the poison in its poison gland. When the charmer allows the snake to bite him immediately thereafter, there is not enough poison left in the gland to do any harm.

What is the next step? The charmer makes the snake bite a fowl while he squeezes the remaining drops of poison out of the snake's gland; the fowl dies, and the charmer wins the confidence of his audience.

Girl Swimmer Weds Her Boatman Guide

Mille Gade Will Swim Down Life's Stream With Clem Corson

ENGLISH CHANNEL NEXT

NEW YORK, Sept. 21—Miss Mille Gade the Danish girl who swam from Albany to New York early this month will today become the bride of Clem Corson, the boatman who rowed alongside her every stroke of the miles she swam this season.

Miss Gade is a sturdy blonde, grown large and strong from her long-distance swimming in which she won fame in Denmark. She is twenty-four years old. Corson is wiry and tanned, a boatman at the Naval Militia Headquarters. His age is thirty seven.

Corson vouches for the fact that their courtship was romantic. He says that Miss Gade is a wonderful girl, that they have known each other for a long time, and that he himself is not much of a swimmer.

His friends intimated that Corson met Miss Gade before she left Denmark two years ago. They said he never expected to see her again, and was overjoyed when he learned that she was in New York. She taught life-saving in the Harlem Y. W. C. A., last winter, while training for her long swims.

Her next swim, according to her fiance, will be across the British Channel next summer. He swells with pride as he refers to his future wife's skill in the water.

Parliamentary "Whips."

The parliamentary origin of the term "Whip" goes back to 1768. In that year, according to Sir Courtenay Ilbert (clerk of the British house of commons from 1902 to 1921), there was a great debate in the house on a petition against the return of Colonel Luttrell for Westminster in place of John Wilkes, who had been expelled from the house by its order. The government made strenuous efforts to bring together all their followers for the division, and Edmund Burke, referring scornfully to the manner in which men had been summoned posthaste even from the continent, likened the activity of the ministers to the whipping-in of a pack of hounds. The phrase caught on. The treasury officials became "whippers-in," and, by rapid process of abbreviation, whips.

Fall Shoe Prices

So many of our customers have been anxiously inquiring about shoe prices for Fall, that I think it timely to briefly present a few facts.

Raw hides in the hair are very cheap—in fact, almost a drug on the market. But the present cost to transform such raw material into shoe leather is still twice pre-war figures. So that while poor grades of leather are only 50% or 60% higher than before the war, there is such a great demand for FINE leathers that they are twice pre-war prices—indeed, some of the most desirable are hard to get at any price.

Finished shoes have dropped considerably from wartime prices; but they are so varied in grade that even an expert finds it difficult to classify. Looking the entire market over however, I should sum up past and present shoe prices as follows:

At the peak of war conditions and demands shoes advanced to THREE TIMES pre-war prices. Today staple shoes for men, women and children can be bought at 60% to 70% more than pre-war prices. In STYLE shoes for men and women, particularly the latter, the present fashions demand a greater amount of labor and more highly skilled labor than ever before. Such shoes will be found to be priced from 75% to 100% more than pre-war prices.

Many people, influenced by the very low price of hides in the hair, expect pre-war prices on shoes this season. And there are retailers who are trying to meet such demands. But the shoes they sell will be more or less clever imitations of the real thing—trimmed and styled and polished to look good—but which cannot stand the strain of service.

To tamper with shoes to meet an impossibly low price is to rob them of either leather or labor goodness, or both—and this policy is always extravagant and disappointing to the user.

To buy your shoes this season from the dealer who is trying to fool neither you nor himself is your greatest safeguard.

The Geuting Standard Prevails

Never have we shopped more scientifically, more skillfully, more conscientiously to accomplish our purpose of meeting conditions most economically for our customers than this season. We have searched out every available market—and you will find here this season shoes not only from the most famous makers in America, but England, Canada, France and Switzerland as well. We consider it a genuine achievement to be able to sell shoes of Geuting standard at our present prices.

The war is over. We are again able to dictate quality. We have specified as an architect does. We demanded certain grades of uppers, soles, linings, trimmings and shoe-making, and we design our own lasts. Therefore we can promise shoes that are 50% better than we were able to secure during the war, although even then Geuting shoes were never built for looks alone.

These are plain facts. You will be able to buy lower-priced shoes than we will sell this season—but, as always, you'll find it more economical to stick to the Geuting standard.
